

Learning Personalized Professional Master's Degree™

Is It Right for You?

The Learning concentration within the Personalized Professional Master's Degree was created for individuals who wish to understand the latest research and practices on learning in the interdisciplinary field of educational psychology, psychology, anthropology or learning sciences while engaging in dynamic interactions with faculty.

Our graduates go on to teach and lead at K-12 schools, community colleges and universities. They also go on to lead in community organizations. Many of our students seek this MA as preparation for doctoral studies in educational psychology, psychology, human development, and related fields.

Contemporary understandings of the brain, the mind, language, culture and diverse settings have shifted how we think about learning. The Personalized Professional MA in Education and Human Development with a concentration in Learning was created for individuals who wish to delve into the latest research and practices on learners' cognition, engagement, growth and development in various formal and informal learning contexts.

A Reputation that Opens Doors

We are nationally ranked among the top schools for education. The Personalized Professional Master's Degree with a concentration in Learning empowers you to best support and engage all learners through developmentally and culturally appropriate social and instructional practices.

Is neuroscience helping us understand the brain to inform how we support learners? How can we design learning environments to improve students' motivation to learn and grow? As a student in this concentration, you will explore these interesting questions. You will examine learning environments in various formal and informal contexts (including classrooms, centers and communities) and from multiple perspectives (psychological, socio-cultural, design-based and neuroscience).
