

THE GRADUATE SCHOOL PRESENTS: MASTER OF ARTS IN SOCIOLOGY

A CHOICE TO STUDY YOUR WORLD

The sociology department at CU Denver offers a comprehensive, progressive, educational experience that prepares students for either entry into the job market or continued study in a PhD program.

As sociologists, our task is to research social problems so we may help to improve the human condition. In our program, students learn to accomplish this task by developing relevant sociological questions, rigorously researching these questions, and effectively communicating these findings to other scholars, communities, and the media.

CAREER PATHS OF GRADUATES

Recent graduates have gone on to sociology PhD programs across the country, while others hold master's-level positions as social science researchers, teachers, and advocates in non-profit and government agencies. Others work in various positions in the private sector.

WHY CHOOSE CU DENVER?

Our program emphasizes research methodology and data analysis, and possesses strong institutional and city connections. As such, we have been identified as "distinctive" by the Western Interstate Commission of Higher Education (WICHE). This distinction allows resident tuition for students who reside in the 13 participating western states.

AREAS OF CONCENTRATION

Crime, Law, and Deviance

Health and Society

Family, Social Services, and Community

According to the American Sociological Association, the three areas of concentration offered by our program are three of the four most sought-after specializations in the labor market.

These areas of concentration are three of the four most sought-after sociology specializations in the labor market (Sociology Master's Graduate Join the Workforce, American Sociological Association, 2011).
